

#LOCABurst...The Country Goes Red, or Does It?

What can we expect from "Trump Economy"?

Hate to tell you this, but no one knows exactly what a Trump Economy is going to look like. However, we have some indicators that are looking better than the job security for the pollsters of this election.

- It's easy to see – Trump is not anti-wealthy. He seems to be standing by a tax plan which would cut taxes, especially for the high-income and corporate crowds. This is likely to be stimulative to our economy leading to more earnings.
- Under President Trump, we are expecting a less regulated environment, lower taxes, and lower healthcare costs.
- In the game of dominos that is America, a more favorable regulatory environment is expected to lead to an increase in corporate earnings, increasing what is considered fair value of the S&P 500.

One important thing we're keeping in mind is in both parties, views have wobbled, making us unsure of what will actually take place under the Trump Administration. The markets seem to be indicating we won't be falling down as a country anytime in the near future.

America - fireworks have been put in place and the show is going to be amazing.

Leading up to the election, the economy was strong with the potential of being stronger, and we think that it's very probable that Trump will make it go boom in a very different way than the world originally thought.

- Politics aside, Obamacare did not go according to the optimistic plan originally set in place. More unhealthy people signed up and less young people did which didn't make Insurance Companies feel so warm and fuzzy.
- President-Elect Trump is changing his mind a bit though, instead of smashing Obamacare into a million pieces he wants to just take out certain pieces, and it's looking like a game of Jenga that may be positive for everyone involved (kids can still stay on their parents insurance plan until 26, and healthy people won't be penalized for not wanting Obamacare being a few – yes we realize there's still a weeble wobble aspect of that, but who really cares if we're all smiling).

- But what's in it for you? With this sort of middle of the road politics, that we think its safe to say no one was expecting, we can enjoy continued job growth, modestly growing inflation, and a healthy Global Economy.

Long story short, we're feeling optimistic. The storyline around the world has been the same in a miraculous way. We all predicted doomsday in the UK, China, then the US and if you look around we're all doing just fine. We may even make some money off this roller coaster.
